

Save SATURDAY delivery

Postal Service customers deserve first-rate service six days a week.

The Postal Service is critical to our economy—delivering mail, medicine and packages on time and at an affordable price, without a dime of taxpayer money.

But no company can grow or even maintain its business by cutting its service. Reducing the scope and quality of service by eliminating Saturday delivery service or closing post offices and facilities will not restore the Postal Service to health. It would likely drive mailers away and therefore worsen the Postal Service's financial problems.

- Cutting Saturday delivery is penny wise and pound foolish—a 16 percent service cut that saves little money.
- Closing post offices and facilities will cost jobs, cut off rural communities and make it harder for small businesses to grow.
- Eliminating Saturday delivery would undermine the Postal Service's role in parcel delivery, the fastest growing part of the postal industry.

The root of the Postal Service's current financial crisis is a 2006 law that drains the USPS of $5.5 billion a year and forces it to overpay billions more into federal pension accounts. Congress created the USPS financial crisis, and Congress can fix it—without drastic cuts in service or massive layoffs, and at no cost to taxpayers.
