Being that we write this column pretty much every week of the year, there will always be a chance that there will be someone reading what's written here who won't agree with what we pen.

There are other times we will pick a topic that we may not have the best information for, or our memory doesn't recall certain information correctly, or we may have had misinformation to begin with. As hard as we try to be as accurate as we can, there are times we prove we are human and you know what they say, "to err is human".

A couple weeks ago we mentioned our postal service and the noticeable slow down in delivery - that can't be disputed, because all you have to do is look at the date on the cancellation of the postage and you'll see that a day or two goes by before you receive what used to get to you the very next day on a very, very regular basis.

The other part of that section of this column mentioned the financial problems the postal service is having and we blamed it on pensions. The word pensions is where we goofed, it should have said benefits.

Another part of that column that we didn't know at the time of writing it was that the postal service is apparently the only entity (public or private) that is being required by Congress to completely fund their post employment health benefits and that is what created the financial woes - in 2006 Congress mandated the funding.

If you wish, you can read a letter to the editor following this column that will help explain where the postal service sits financially.

In last week's column, near the end, we spent some time on the subject of our Minnesota Vikings and how disappointed we were in the first game of their season. We also mentioned that we couldn't comment on the second game because this column is written on Friday mornings and the second game wasn't played until Sunday.

Our disappointment at the time was real. It seems to us that every year since we started watching the team not too long after their very first game in 1961 - naturally we don't remember much about the early years, except to say that we do remember watching Fran Tarkenton scrambling all over the field, but we aren't sure if that was his first or second stint with the Vikes. Either way, it was at least 40 years ago - we've listened to the team hype and all the great things that would happen every year, only to be let down year after year.

Then came last Sunday (September 20th). Wow, it was a totally different team that took the field. The very first drive ended in a touchdown and the defense looked a whole lot better too. The Vikes won, but we couldn't comment because the paper goes to press early on Monday morning and we had no time to change what was written.

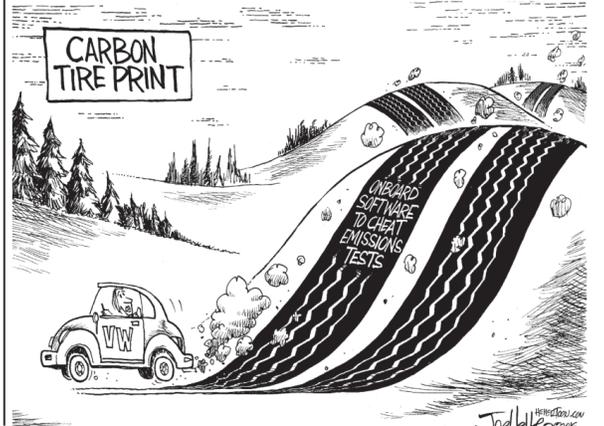

As always, we'll sit down and watch the Vikings play football - more likely a recorded game this time because we will be playing in a golf tournament at Rich-Spring on Sunday (September 27th) - be we'll try to keep from commenting because the delay in our ability to comment on games is going to create nothing but confusion for our readers.

With the risk of sounding like a broken record, we'll say one more time that summer has gone too fast and it's hard to believe next week is October.

It's not that we don't like fall. We like the changing color of area trees, we like the cooler nights and days, we like that fishing gets better, we like the time we spend hunting, we like the time we spend on the bike looking at the tree colors all over the state - it's what follows that gets harder and harder to enjoy. COLD winter.

We won't complain about the snow because we actually enjoy clearing our driveway and the few other parking lots and driveways we do, because we have a blower with a cab and heat, so it isn't like it's a lot of work and even on the coldest days we stay pretty comfortable. It's just that the winter months seem to drag on while the summer months zip right by.

We remember a long time ago when someone older than us told us that if we thought summers were short then, wait until we're older because they'll seem to go by even faster - man, was that person right! And you know what? There's not a thing we can do about it. If we moved too far south there wouldn't be much change of seasons and we'd probably grow pretty tired of the same old thing every day.

One good thing about the four seasons we enjoy here is that there is always something to look forward to and nothing gets real boring. We'll keep trying to look on the bright side.

Have A Good Week!

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor,
The U.S. Postal Service, which is based in the Constitution, helps unify this vast nation while delivering daily to 153 million homes and businesses. It's the largest civilian employer of veterans and is annually rated by the public as the most trusted federal agency.

And yet, there's a lot of misinformation out there about the Postal Service.

Some folks assert, for example, that it loses billions of dollars a year because the growth of the Internet has led to lower mail volumes, taxpayers are on the hook for this, and so cuts need to be made - such as slowing the mail, ending Saturday deliveries or replacing door-to-door delivery with neighborhood cluster boxes.

Fortunately, none of that is true.

Let's look at the facts. Postal Service operations are profitable, and increasingly so. Through the first three quarters of Fiscal Year 2015, earned revenue exceeds business expenses by $1.2 billion. (The Postal Service funds itself through the sale of stamps and other products, not through taxpayer dollars.)

That's ahead of the figures at this point last year. The Postal Service ended fiscal 2014 with a $1.4 billion operating profit, which in turn was better than 2013.

Why the improving picture? After falling sharply during the worst recession in 80 years, mail revenue is stabilizing amid a gradually improving economy. Meanwhile, as people in Cold Spring and Minneapolis and elsewhere shop online, package revenue is skyrocketing, making the Internet a net positive and auguring well for the future.

There is red ink at the Postal Service, but it has nothing to do with the mail or the Internet or with normal business expenses. Rather, it stems from Washington politics. In 2006, a lame-duck Congress mandated that the Postal Service pre-fund future retiree health benefits. No other public agency or private company in the country has to pre-fund for even one year; the Postal Service must pre-fund 75 years into the future and pay for it all over a decade. That $5.6 billion annual charge is the red ink.

The onerous and unfair pre-funding mandate created an artificial 'crisis' at the Postal Service - leading to the closing of post offices and mail-processing plants that has slowed the mail in rural areas, small towns and communities in general throughout the country.

Pre-funding is a political problem that lawmakers created - and that they can and should address. Not only is the Postal Service critical to our economy and our recovery by facilitating commerce and offering businesses and residents universal and efficient service, it also is the centerpiece of a $1.3 trillion national mailing industry that employs 7.5 million Americans in the private sector - including 171,077 in Minnesota.

If Congress fixes the pre-funding problem while strengthening the now-profitable postal networks, the Postal Service can continue to provide Americans and their businesses with the industrial world's most-affordable delivery network.

Fredric Rolando, president of the National Association of Letter Carriers, Washington D.C.
